Background/Issues & Analysis
Glen Lucky is a well-known resident of Carson City and a local legend. He has been recognized as an inspiration to our community for decades as he rides various specially designed adaptive tricycles from his home in Indian Hills to downtown Carson City in an effort to overcome the debilitating effects of cerebral palsy. Born in 1952, he was once told he would not live past age 15, but with incredible perseverance he has logged tens of thousands of miles on his tricycles. In 1988 he rode to the White House, covering over 3,600 miles in over 100 days, to attend events organized by groups supporting cerebral palsy research and the Special Olympics. That tricycle is now on display at the Nevada State Museum in Carson City, along with the Olympic Torch he carried in the lead-up to the 2002 Winter Olympics. His dedication has earned him suggestions from community members for naming the multi-use path along South Carson Street as "Lucky's Lane".
